

INTRODUCTION

In Crossing the River, Carol Smith recounts how she faced down the crippling loss of her son through reporting on people coping with their own challenges, whether a life-altering accident, injury, or diagnosis. These are stories of survival and transformation, of people confronting devastating situations that changed them unexpectedly. A mixture of memoir and reporting, this book is about posttraumatic resilience in the face of grief and how other people's stories can help us through the most devastating experiences.
